As one of the country's first planned communities, Riverside has been welcoming visitors and residents to its serene riverbanks since its founding in 1869. Designed by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux, Riverside's expansive parks and parkways, curvilinear streets, remarkable architecture, and gas-lit street lanterns take you back to the rural pleasures of yesteryear. And it's all just a short 11 mile train ride from downtown Chicago.

Visit Riverside's shops and restaurants, take a leisurely bike ride along our tree-lined streets past more landmark homes than you will find on any other bike route in America. See magnificent homes by Frank Lloyd Wright and other famous architects, and visit the country's first commercial arcade building, beautifully restored with its signature copper cupola. Stroll or bike across our swinging bridge and take a relaxing break in the shade of our historic Water Tower.

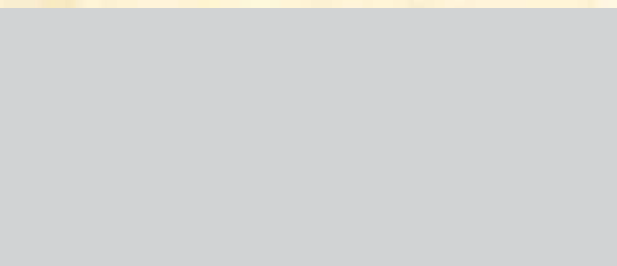

Come to where yesterday meets tomorrow in one of Chicago's most historic suburbs. Designated a National Historic Landmark in 1970, there is always another delightful surprise waiting for you around the next curve in Riverside, Illinois.

Riverside has the First Multi-Tenant Shopping Center in the USA!

A Brief History...

The area that is now Riverside holds a unique place in our country's history. Its proximity to the Chicago Portage, which provided a connection between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi River, made the area a focal point for Native American settlements and an active trading route. Explorers Jacques Marquette and Louis Joliet were shown the Portage by local Native Americans in 1673, and it was a defining factor in the founding and development of Chicago and the nation's westward expansion.

The Forbes family came to Riverside (then called Aux Plaines) and built the first home west of Chicago in 1831. There was minimal development during the mid-1800s, but that changed in 1863 when the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad built a rail line through the area. Then, in 1869, a group of visionary businessmen formed the Riverside Improvement Company and set out to develop "a perfect village in a perfect setting."

To achieve this lofty goal, the RIC commissioned landscape architects Frederick Law Olmsted (the "father of landscape architecture") and his partner Calvert Vaux to design one of the first planned suburban communities in the United States. Olmsted and Vaux were already well-known for their design of New York City's Central Park, and their "General Plan for Riverside" quickly became a landmark in urban design and landscape architecture.

Olmsted and Vaux strove to create a pastoral atmosphere in an urban environment, combining the pleasures of rural life with conveniences such as community-provided gas lighting, water services, and well-maintained streets. Instead of using a typical grid pattern for Riverside's streets, Olmsted and Vaux designed curvilinear streets that followed the contours of the land and the Des Plaines River, emphasizing the community's connection to nature.

Olmsted and Vaux considered the public landscape a civic necessity, and their plan included a Grand Park system of several large parks and multiple smaller triangular parks located at intersections throughout the town to provide public space for neighbors to gather and interact. In all, almost one-half of the Village was set aside as public land. This emphasis on connectivity with nature, reliance on mass transit, and focus on sustainable livability made Riverside one of the first conservation design communities in the United States.
